The fact that the great States of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana were yesterday to give a vote indicative of the result in the November election, was a fact borne in mind by a good many people, judging by the street indications through the afternoon and evening.

About 8 c'clock in the evening, the hour at which the polis closed in Philadelphia, the feverishness got any pretty high, in anticipation that ward results would soon be finaled over the wires from that city. [A voice—"Good for that."] There were mistakes in the management of the election to-day, and every Demo-crat should put his shoulder to the wheel in the Presidential election, and defeat the enemy. [Applause.] Rev. T. G. Clayton who-perhaps for the reason that "Hoover" hung fire so ominously— seemed to apprehend democratic disaster in Pennsylvania, and made some remarks calculated, apparently, to prepare the audience for bad news from that quarter, saying that the election there that day was a local election affected by local interests, and therefore not significant of general results. Mr. Emerson Etheridge was called upon for a speech, when that gentleman took the stand and endeavored to revive the drooping spirits of those present, expressing the belief that they would carry Pennsylvania.
